LEE SULPHUR SPRINGS

Since the early 1800s when the famous Lee family of Virginia made their summer retreat at Howard’s Lick, the area has been building a reputation as a popular resort. Now known as Lost River State Park, the area has come into its own as a family vacation facility.

Originally part of the massive land holdings of Thomas Lord Fairfax, this region fell to the apportionment of Lord Fairfax’s land after the Revolutionary War. Successful military leaders were granted land for their service during the war. It was in this manner that “Light Horse Harry” Lee acquired the land. Shortly thereafter, Lee built the cabin that is listed in the National Register of Historic Places and is now preserved as a museum at the park. The cabin museum is open weekends from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

CCC INFLUENCE

During the Great Depression, beginning May 15, 1934, Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) Company 1524 occupied Camp Hardy, which was located near the present day entrance to Lost River State Park. By 1937, the CCC boys had built 15 standard cabins, an administration building, the superintendent's residence, a swimming pool and bathhouse, a spring house covering the Lee Sulphur Springs (named after Henry "Light Horse Harry" Lee, Robert E. Lee's father), and several bridges and other small stone structures throughout the park.

The stonework of these beautiful buildings and structures was built to last. Many CCC work examples remain intact, including the 15 standard cabins still in use today.

The hardworking young men also reconstructed the Lee Cabin, also located on the park. The cabin was originally used as a summer home by "Light Horse Harry" Lee. On July 1, 1937, Lost River State Park's 3,712 acres of land opened to the public, and today the park is a tribute to the tireless work of the CCC boys.
