PRICKETT'S FORT STATE PARK

PERCHED ON A SMALL RISE overlooking the confluence of Prickett's Creek and the Monongahela River, this rustic log fort is a re-creation of the original Prickett's Fort of 1774, which served as a refuge from Native American war parties on the western frontier of Colonial Virginia. Built in 1976 by the Pricketts Fort Memorial Foundation, the "new" fort serves as a living history site where interpreters in period attire re-create the lifestyles of both the settlers and Native American inhabitants that were here in the late 18th century. Throughout the season, visitors may find blacksmiths, spinners, weavers, potters, gun smiths and other traditional artisans at work.

The fort covers a 100 by 100 foot square with 12-foot high log walls and blockhouses at each corner. Lining the weathered stockade walls are 14 tiny cabins, some with earthen floors. A meetinghouse and a storehouse fill the common.

When the threat of Native American uprisings occurred, up to 80 families from the surrounding countryside would hurry to the fort. They would stay as long as the threat existed, from days to weeks.

"Forting up" was simply tolerated by settlers, as life in the cramped quarters could be unpleasant, but such sacrifices were necessary for survival on the dangerous frontier of the late 1700s. Today's fort, just north of Fairmont, still portrays that life and time.

JOB PRICKETT HOUSE

Just south of the fort stands the Job Prickett House, built in 1859 by the great grandson of Capt. Jacob Prickett, for whom the fort was named. The difference between the 18th century historical reconstruction and the original 19th century house illustrates the development to an increasingly civilized lifestyle through an 85-year span. The house is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and contains antiques originally used by the Prickett family.
