State Parks & Forests

LOCATED AT THE EXTREME TIP of West Virginia's northern panhandle, Tomlinson Run State Park provides a wide range of recreational opportunities. The park's 1,396 acres extend along the stream from which the park gets its name, both of which are named for a family of early settlers. Roughly divided into two sections, the wilderness area offers heavily forested hills, overhanging cliffs of sandstone and shale, and a profusion of wildflowers. Featured within the developed area of the park are picnicking, boating, miniature golf, basketball and volleyball courts, swimming, waterslide, campground and group camp. In addition, events are scheduled from April through December.

What is a Yurt?

Though generally classified as a tent, the yurt is much stronger and weathertight. Traditionally, a yurt is a portable, felt-covered, wood lattice-framed dwelling structure used by nomads in the steppes of Central Asia.

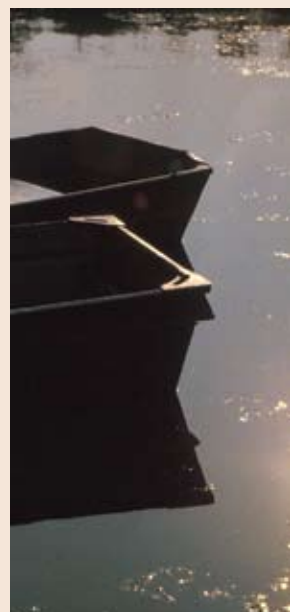

The word "yurt" is originally from the Turkic word meaning "dwelling place." In Russian, the structure is called "yurta," which is where the English word derives.

Our yurts are circular structures that consist of a durable fabric cover, tension band and a wood frame that includes a lattice wall, radial rafters, central compression ring and a framed door.

Yurt rental is a unique offering only at Tomlinson Run and is perfect for the novice camper. All yurts come complete with a cooler, a propane stove, lantern, picnic table and cookware.
